A lot of people tend to close their eyes while listening to a beautiful piece of music, saying it helps them to be transported to a different place. Having said that, you don't need to do any of that while watching the latest video uploaded by Italian musician and aerospace engineer Leonardo Barilaro.

Leonardo decided to celebrate his two year anniversary in Malta with a video of him performing a classic piece by Brahms, Intermezzo Op.118 N.2, on his piano. And acting as the backdrop of it all was a stunning view of St. Paul's Bay from his apartment.

One pure Jewel by Johannes Brahms. This Intermezzo Op.118 n.2 dives into the deepest part of human nature, lighting gently our silent and fragile emotions. These notes are very near to my heart and every time I play and listen to Brahms's harmonies I am overwhelmed by the emotions flowing under my skin, feeling myself travelling in my present, past and future.

Over the last two years, Leonardo has seen his fair share of success on our tiny island. Last summer, his string quartet Blue Eon Antithesis was selected for the Malta International Arts Festival, where it was performed by the London Sinfonietta ensemble.
